FINE ARTS GROUP MEETING

Mrs. Louis F. Klein of Oakland Street, Mattapoisett will receive members of the Fine Arts Group of the Mattapoisett Woman's Club on Wednesday morning, December 7th, at 10 o'clock for a meeting at which the first part will be devoted to the topic "Porcelain Treasures in our Homes," and the second, "Spotlight on the Capitol".

To supplement the viewing of Royal Dalton and other figurines of choice design which are beautifully mounted in the Klein home, club members are urged to share some porcelain single items of their own, easily carried to the meeting and relate any interesting background history briefly which these may be known to have.

Following this, Mr. Klein, an authority on illumination, who spent five years in this field at the Capitol, Washington, D.C., will "spotlight" some features of his experience there, with a chance also offered to examine some detail photographs, never published, all to be enjoyed in an informal conversational manner.

At the coffee hour Mrs. Robert E. Crabbe will assist the hostess. Those attending will kindly R.S.V.P. to Mrs. Klein 3531 or Mrs. Crabbe 3873. A reminder to those who attended the Fine Arts music event in November comes from Cider and donuts were served during a refreshment period.

At a later committee meeting the boys were divided into nine dens, each den mother having a full den. The committee feels that before any new boys can be taken in, a new den mother will be needed in order for boys to receive all that Cubbing has to offer. The Den Mothers will contact the boys and their families as to when the dens will meet. Any boy that has not been reached may call their new den mother as listed.

CHRISTMAS MUSIC FESTIVAL

One of the most pleasant aspects of the Christmas season is the music which is enjoyed during this time of year. The Regional Civic Chorus is giving the community an opportunity to listen to some of this Holiday music by presenting a Christmas Festival to be held in the Old Rochester Regional High School auditorium Sunday, December 11, at 3:00 P.M. Members of the audience will not only enjoy hearing vocal music rendered by the Chorus as well as the Wanderers, but will also be able to listen to some delightful instrumental music presented by the Regional Symphonic Band.

The chorus is directed by Mr. Zavan Mazmanian, the Wanderers by Mrs. Lee S. Root, and the Band by Mr. John R. Pandolfi. One of the highlights of the program will be when the chorus, accompanied by the Band, presents the

It was announced that Gail Bauer, chairman of the Home and Community Service Committee, called at the Mattapoisett Nursing Home and presented 60 Thanksgiving tray favors for the patients.

The worthy lecturer, Joseph Alves, opened his program with a Conservation guessing game on "Forest of Trees". Members had to guess the names of trees from a sentence having a cue to guide them, such as the following: "What tree is sad and will soon fade away?"

His program continued with everyone drawing a turkey in the dark. James Sullivan was the winner. The second turkey number was pinning the eye on the turkey. The Juniors were blindfolded and the large turkey was drawn by the lecturer. Jane Carson was the winner.

The lecturer's march closed the program. Refreshment hosts were Mark Harris and Joseph Alves, who served punch and cookies, and little squash pies for a surprise. Mrs. Mildred LeBaron, matron, was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jefferson and Mrs. Ruby Barber.

Years Ago

By C. M.

125 Years Ago -- 1841

When these six ships and a brig were abuilding on the stocks in 1841, tremendous amounts of material had to be imported into the village --and 85% of it came by sea (there was no railroad as yet). Countless brigs, schooners, and sloops furrowed the waters of the harbor. Some brought yellow pine from Savannah and Charleston for the planking of the hulls. Some brought live oak and live oak knees from Jacksonville and New Orleans. Some brought iron to be used in the ships blacksmith shops for the enormous amount of iron work on a whaler. Some brought countless supplies needed in the completion of the ships: rope, canvass, caulking, cooper supplies--ad infinitum--from a dozen other ports. In 1840 approximately 40 sail of merchant and coasting vessels were owned in Mattapoisett.

Vessels that went to Maine for spar timber had big ports on each side of the bow. When a vessel returned, she was docked on the west side of the short wharf with her bow to shore right in line with a greased wooden ramp (about where the launching ramp now is). The bow ports were then opened, a yoke of oxen backed down, a cable hauled in through the port, and the oxen would snake the long, straight tree trunks out of the vessel and up the ramp to be dragged to water storage at either of the two spar yards: one west of the Barstow Shipyard at the foot of Pearl Street, the other on the beach (by the house) at the foot of Barstow Street.

In the back sections of the town a dozen sawmills, their huge water wheels yanking their up-and-down saws all day long, sawed out white oak for keels and framing for the hulls, white pine and cedar for inside panelling for the cabins, ash for a half dozen uses. Men drew timber to the Mattapoisett shipyards from as far as 30 miles away. In the Holmes Shipyard

Papers is a letter from a farmer in Taunton saying that he had a stick of white oak timber 30 feet long and over a foot square the whole length which he would drag to Mattapoisett for the right price.

All this timber had to be moved from woods to mill and from mill to shipyard by oxen. And every shipyard used a half a dozen yoke of oxen. Some hauled heavy timbers, spars, finished iron products from the ships's blacksmith shops, to the stocks; some hoisted cargo from the holds of merchant ships; some unloaded heavy casks of oil from the holds of whalers; some lowered barrels of provisions into holds of outgoing vessels. In the 1840's there were 75 yoke of oxen in the town.

Although the village was surrounded by farms, not nearly enough food was produced to feed the inhabitants and to stock the outgoing whalers for voyages lasting anywhere from six months to three years. Every shipyard owner ran a general store. To stock this with provisions and general merchandise, he also owned a packet sloop which made constant trips to New York. He seldom paid his workmen wages, but expected them to trade at his store where with the goods brought in at wholesale by sloop, the workmen were paid with goods at retail prices. From time to time a reckoning was made and the amount of a worker's purchases balanced against so many days' work on the ship. One is struck, and amused, by the frequency with which these two columns precisely balance each other. Only rarely did the shipbuilder owe his men any cash.

Between 300 and 400 men thronged the streets every morning and night on their way to and from work in the shipyards and their allied shops. Along the water front up the narrow streets were spar yards, blacksmith shops, cooper shops, sail lofts, block-maker shops, whaleboat shops --the house on Church Street next west from Dr. King's office was the whaleboat shop of Channing & Cox, for instance--and in a busy year like 1841 every one was going full time.

Water Street between Pearl and North was crowded with oxen and horses and their loads and drivers, with men on countless errands, with seamen coming home or leaving on a voyage, with business men from half a dozen ports in town for a couple of days to do business with the shipbuilders and others. Three stage coaches a day threaded their way through the traffic--New Bedford to Plymouth, New Bedford to Sandwich, and New Bedford to Wareham--pulled up at the Mattapoisett House (taken down years ago). Many of the visitors stayed at this hotel; other stayed at Squire Meigs'

Tavern (the present Hotel); but important ones were apt to be put up at the shipbuilder's home.

Josiah Holmes, Sr., who started his shipyard in 1812, built and lived in the large building now known as the Stage Coach Apartments, and many were the weeks when Mrs. Holmes used a barrel of flour in the kitchen to provide a noon meal for visiting shipping agents wanting a ship built, salesmen for every conceivable article, insurance agents and adjustors, ship's officers, and seamen.

One such shipping agent visitor had been Thomas Macy of the whaling firm of T. & P. Macy in Nantucket, who had come to Mattapoisett in March to talk with Holmes about building the ship Potomac. The agreement between the two men is dated March 3, 1841, in Mattapoisett, and calls for Holmes to build a ship 104 ft. long, breadth of beam 23'3", at $42. a ton; $3000 to be paid at the signing of the contract; $4000 four months from this date, and the balance in two months from delivery.

The Potomac made half a dozen four-year voyages to the Pacific for the Macy firm until the Civil War when she was sold to the government to make up one of the famous "stone fleet" which was sunk in the channel of Charleston Harbor in an effort to blockade that port.
